

Gay-Friendly Social Network: The Cyberbully Antidote

With cyber-bullying still being a problem on social networks, those with alternative lifestyles become fearful revealing anything personal or saying anything that others could “read into.” This becomes the breeding ground for bullies to make conclusions about someone's orientation and slander them.

SocialGroovy.com is quickly becoming a safe alternative, with members growing by the minute. It has all the popular features members love: photo uploads & albums, live chatting, and group creation, but also has some great privacy features. These include the ability to hide ALL or just some select sections of your profile; preventing bullies from searching for people based on orientation, or sexual predators to search by age. (Only 13 and up may join).

Simple to use and create a profile, and no invite-only to sign up! Founder Jonathan Dugmore says that it will always be free to join, and brags that “Social Groovy will never change its format. Ever.”

Social Groovy is proving itself to be the next biggest social network on the web; why not check it out and get your Groove on?
